Christian recreation

(Theodore Cuyler, "Christian Recreation and Unchristian Amusement" 1858)

All work makes a man a sorry slave.
 All play makes him a sorrier fool.
 The wise person avoids both extremes.

Whatever makes . . .
 your body healthier,
 your mind happier, and
 your immortal soul purer,
 is Christian recreation.

Many confound innocent recreation with sinful pleasures. One is right and the other is ruinous. Everything that . . .
 rests my body or mind,
 improves my health
 and elevates my soul,
 is commendable.

Everything that stimulates my lustful propensities, until I become a walking maniac—everything that debauches my body, weakens my conscience, excites impure thoughts, and makes my soul a horrendous house of imagery—everything that makes me forget God and eternity—is dangerous, and in the end damnable.
